Presentation

With a PhD in public law, Tarek focuses on infrastructure projects, particularly in the energy (renewable and fossil fuels), transport and mining sectors. His practice covers in particular the analysis of public procurement legal issues and all regulatory aspects involved in such projects (including energy, environmental, town planning, public domain laws, etc.), as well as green field and brown field projects. In addition to his advisory work, he also assists clients in litigation related to their infrastructure projects.

Prior to joining ASAFO & CO., Tarek worked in the legal departments of major corporations, and completed internships at the Paris law firms Dentons (2021) and Darrois Villey Maillot Brochier (2020). He was also a lecturer at the University Panthéon-Assas between 2014 and 2021, and Secretary General of the University's Centre for Comparative Public Law between 2018 and 2020.
